The Academic World Has Changed

From

What we have observed...

- The library's future will be dependent on the status of course modalities (on campus, online, international), sustained enrollment, and support revenues
- Almost all staff are working from home, limited staff in library
- >30% increase in discovery searches in the last few months
- Use of electronic resources and open content skyrocket
- Librarians helped faculty to develop course content, provided research support, and assisted in the identification and linking of course content.
- Home delivery, sometimes for a fee, has begun to be used for physical items

Now more than ever - Cloud Based Library Solutions

Alma and Primo as SaaS products allows library staff operators to work from home productively and efficiently focusing on the library goals, providing remote services to their patrons with minimal interruptions.

- Make Content Available

A new initiative: Alma for smaller libraries

The typical characteristics of a smaller library

Don't have enough IT people

Would like to do more but unable (resources, workflows, systems)

All/Most staff have to 'do it all'

Has an outdated library system process for managing e-resources is not streamlined

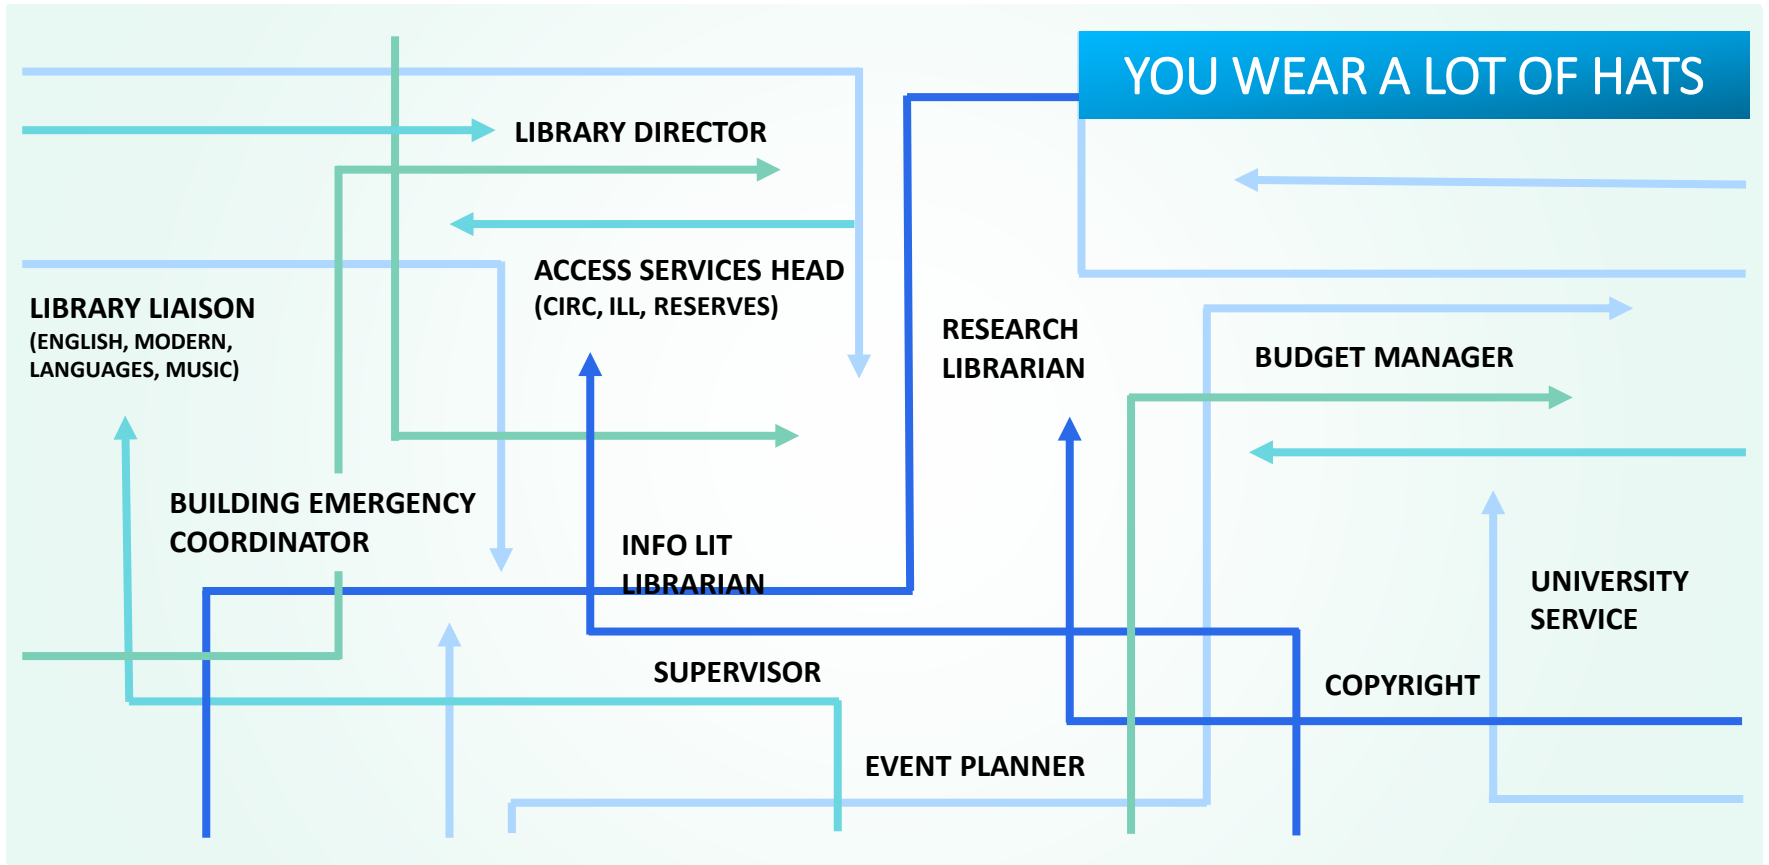

Print, Electronic and Digital resources are being managed separately

Moving to remote is a struggle

The screenshot displays the ExLibris Leganto interface for a course resource list. The main content area shows a list of items, including an article titled "Berlin in the Twentieth Century: A Cultural Topography" and a book titled "Total chaos: the art and aesthetics of hip-hop / edited by Jeff Chang". The interface includes a sidebar with navigation options like "LISTS", "COLLECTION", "FIND LISTS", and "REPORTS". A "List Advisor" panel on the right shows a 100% completion status. A "Collaborators" panel lists users like Nancy Smith, Tamar Sadeh, and Angela Schmidt. At the bottom, a "Student Engagement" section features a bar chart showing the number of active students over time.
